

Mass is the inherent property of every substance which remains constant even after variation of temperature.

but this is not the case with volume.

Volume = Mass/Density.

On increasing the temperature, the molecules start moving in a more random manner which leads to the decrease in the density of the substance..

that is, the volume increases.